YALI Fellows leave their mark on FIU

By Robyn Nissim

Detailed planning, commitment and the participation of many members of the FIU faculty and staff supported the university through its first experience as a host institution for the 2014 Young African Leaders Initiative (YALI—renamed the Mandela Washington Fellows by President Barack Obama on July 28).

Led by Susan Webster, DoR’s Director of Training and International Research Initiatives, FIU worked hard to be selected as one of this year’s hosts for 2014—the first year that universities were eligible to apply.

It was a competitive group that applied but FIU was chosen as one of only 20 institutions in the country for the YALI program. There were 500 YALI students in total and 25 of those Fellows came to South Florida for a program that focused specifically on public management.

The Mandela Fellows had a packed schedule while they were here, with courses, workshops and community service assignments part of every week. Social events such as movies, Marlins games and shopping were also included; several students even attended the Beyoncé-Jay-Z concert that kicked off in Miami.

FIU’s leadership training was designed to help these young leaders in their work advocating for human rights, access to education and water sanitation, among other issues back in their home countries. Eric Ngondi, a blind water and environmental engineer, had his first experience with a guide dog while he was here. “We don’t have them in Kenya,” he noted. When he returns to Kenya, he wants to create a non-profit that will train and place guide dogs, expenses that can reach $80,000 per dog. “But I learned how important they are for sustaining the environment and I had no absolutely no idea that they are so critical and that many species have gone extinct.” Another unusual finding for the Mandela Fellows at FIU: It actually is hotter than Africa here. And the air conditioning inside is freezing.

The Mandela Fellows are now on the last leg of their trip, which includes a trip to Washington for a presidential summit and a meeting with President Obama.

At a closing reception before they left, President Rosenberg told them that they are now part of the FIU worldwide community. Some Mandela Fellows are already planning to return to FIU—as students, faculty—or possibly even as political leaders.

It was a positive learning experience for both the FIU community and the Mandela Fellow community. Those who met the Fellows were impressed by their eagerness to learn, their interest in becoming better leaders, by the work they have done in the countries to date and their plans for the future.

Webster is looking forward to hearing from and about them for years to come. “These Fellows are now FIU alumni and I believe we will continue to have a friendship and to foster new partnerships in the future,” Webster said.
Upcoming Events

August 2014

- August 4, 12 to 1 pm, WC #130, “Selective Inhibitors of ADAM17 as a Potential Melanoma Therapy,” presented by Dmitry Minond of the Torrey Pines Institute for Molecular Studies, and Affiliate Research Professor, Department of Biomedical Sciences Charles E. Schmidt College of Medicine, and hosted by the Biomolecular Sciences Institute. Please contact Lidia Kos for further details. (This is a Bring-your-own-Lunch event.)

- August 28, Dr. Phil Arlen, Consultant, Florida Translational Research Program (FTRP) at Sanford-Burnham Medical Research Institute to visit FIU in order to facilitate new collaborations between FIU faculty and Sanford Burnham under FTRP. Dr. Arlen would like to meet with interested faculty one-on-one. His goal is to provide a brief overview of the FTRP and its various components ( assay development, high-throughput screening, and hit-to-lead work) and to determine if there is a fit between the individual projects and the various components of FTRP. If you are interested in scheduling a one-on-one meeting please contact Dr. Yuk-Ching Tse-Dinh, Founding Director, Biomolecular Sciences Institute. For more information about FTRP http://www.sanfordburnham.org/technology/centers/cpccg/floridatranslationalresearchprogram/Pages/Program-Description.aspx

The College of Arts and Sciences (CAS), in partnership with the College of Engineering & Computing (CEC), the Robert Stempel College of Public Health & Social Work, and the Herbert Wertheim College of Medicine are proud to launch the 4th year of the Faculty Mentor Program (FMP). Faculty from other colleges interested in participating are also welcome to join. This program is aimed primarily at providing tenure-earning assistant professors with a faculty mentor from outside of his/her home department. To the extent possible, we will attempt to provide a mentor or mentoring opportunities for Associate Professors and Instructors. If interested, please contact us at mentor@fiu.edu or visit http://mentor.fiu.edu for the future RSVP link, updates, and information on new and past workshops.
