

New Faculty Research Program for Support in the Humanities Awards First Grants

The scholarship and research activities of faculty in the humanities enhance FIU's reputation and visibility. Since her appointment in 2015 as a Faculty Fellow in the Office of the Provost, Rebecca Friedman, PhD, Associate Professor of History, has strived to support and showcase the scholarly productivity of FIU's faculty in the humanities. Among the numerous humanities-related initiatives that Dr. Friedman has spearheaded successfully during her first year as a Faculty Fellow, one of the most exciting is the Faculty Research Support Program in the Humanities.

The Faculty Research Support Program in the Humanities awards small grants for highly meritorious faculty research projects and interdisciplinary endeavors that have the potential to garner national and international attention, heightening FIU's profile and prestige and perhaps leading to external funding support. In its inaugural round of funding, eight outstanding proposals were selected from a highly competitive field of more than 40 applications. The six faculty members who received individual research grant awards and the titles of their successful proposals are as follows:

April Merleaux, PhD
Associate Professor
History:
*An Environmental and Agrarian
History of the War on Drugs*

David Rifkind, PhD
Associate Professor
Architecture:
Modern Ethiopia: Architecture, Urbanism and the Building of a Nation

Recognizing that interdisciplinary inquiries are likely to yield broader visions and increase research vitality, the Faculty Research Program in the Humanities also made two awards for interdisciplinary collaborations among the humanities faculty and between humanities faculty and faculty in other disciplines. The team of Whitney A. Bauman, PhD, Associate Professor of Religious Studies, and Nathaniel Cadle, PhD, Associate Professor in the Department of English, received funds to establish the Environmental Humanities Working Group.
